This booklet describes how students can finance their college expenses, how the College Scholarship Service functions, and how financial need is determined. Included are a number of suggestions that are intended to be helpful to a counselor. Among these are: (1) encourage all capable students to continue their education whatever their financial circumstances, (2) use federal programs to help students of marginal motivation to gain more confidence in planning for the future. (3) help students to understand that they are the ones to gain from higher education and not be be reluctant to apply for loans and grants. (4) help parents and students understand that financial aid is usually awarded on the basis of need rather than achievement. (5) help parents to understand that colleges expect them to draw primarily on their income. (6) urge students in need of aid to save for their education, and (7) urge students to write to non-college sponsors and colleges for aid information. A list of colleges and agencies using the parents confidential statements for awarding scholarships is given. (Author/KJ)

College Scholarship Service

The College Scholarship Service Assembly is a constituent membership body within the College Entrance Examination Board. More than 1,050 colleges and universities, secondary schools, school districts, and professional associations are members of the Assembly. In addition to these, 350 spensors and donors have contracts with the College Scholarship Service, and more than 500 nonmemical er institutions of higher education use the css need analysis service. Inherent in the use of the service is a commitment to principles emphasizing the distribution of financial assistance to students on the basis of need.

Operational activities for the College Scholarship Service are performed by Educational Testing Service.

How counselors can help

Increasingly, secondary school students and their parents have been asking counselors for advice on how to pay for college. With the enactment of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, and the Higher Education Acts of 1965 and 1968, these pressures on counselors are sure to become even greater.

This booklet describes the various kinds of financial aid and their sources, how colleges and other agencies measure financial need and administer their aid funds, and how counselors can help colleges, federal and state agencies, and private sponsors in fulfilling the national purpose of equal educational opportunities for all as well as the specific purposes of the institutions and agencies themselves.

Guidance personnel in schools, colleges, and local agencies are working with two groups of students in need of college and financial planning: those who have already decided to go to college and must only make appropriate choices, and those who do not plan on college because they are deterred by financial and other considerations.

Students in this second group are the subject of an increased national interest in expanding educational opportunities. They constitute the greatest challenge to the school counselor, because of their negative attitudes toward continuing their education. The counselor can give them confidence that through their own initiative and the help of various kinds of aid—scholarships, loans, and jobs—they too can attend college. This task is arduous and at times frustrating, but when it succeeds the effort is well justified by the rewards to the student.

Many students from families of very modest means do attend college today. They are proof that with encouragement and adequate information about financing a college education, a student can overcome the most severe economic handicaps.

Work with discouraged and unmotivated students must be done before they are seniors. Students who are economically poor but are motivated can be helped when they are seniors, but most of those who are discouraged will have been lost to further education if they have not already dropped out of school.

The Higher Education Act of 1965 provides evidence of the interest in and importance of early identification and counseling of economically disadvantaged students. Section 407 specifies that, as a condition for receipt of funds for the Educational Opportunity Grants Program, the institution of higher education must agree to "make vigorous efforts to identify qualified youths of exceptional financial need and to encourage them to continue their education beyond secondary schools through programs and activities such as (a) establishing or strengthening close working relationships with secondary school principals and guidance counseling personnel with a view toward motivating students to complete secondary school and pursue postsecondary school educational opportunities, and (b) making, to the extent feasible, conditional commitments for Educational Opportunity Grants to qualified secondary school students with special emphasis on students enrolled in grade 11 or lower grades...."

Section 408 provides further evidence of the importance placed on early identification of economically disadvantaged students. Under this section, the Commissioner of Education is authorized to enter into contracts with public and nonprofit organizations and institutions, and state and local education agencies, to conduct programs of identification and encouragement, and to publicize existing forms of student financial aid. Many colleges (both individually and jointly), local poverty programs, and state agencies have applied for and received such contracts. But without the continuing and active support of school counselors, the full effect of these programs cannot be realized.

Making new federal programs work

Although the college and university admissions and financial aid officers are responsible for allocating funds under the various student aid programs sponsored by the federal government, and although they will be increasingly active in helping to uncover admissible candidates who qualify for assistance, the chief responsibility for identifying such candidates must rest with the secondary schools. Principals, counselors, and teachers have continuous contact with students at the time when identification can be most effective. Only a limited amount of perspective can be developed during the last year of secondary school. School personnel must begin this identification process in earlier years.

ことである。 こうしょう ハイア・ハイド・ハイス・ハイスを見るのいのせんははまれた場合は様々な大変を

The Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 includes in its provisions the means for school districts to direct their guidance efforts at the specific goals of reducing dropouts and increasing the number of students with native ability who finish secondary school with good enough records to qualify for further education. School districts serving low-income areas are especially urged to investigate Title III of this Act, entitled "Supplementary Educational Centers and Services." Under this title, funds have been made available to increase the number of school guidance personnel and to make possible a wider variety of counseling services.

The increased national concern with education, the existence of funds for both the identification of and assistance to capable but needy students, combined with increased cooperative efforts by all segments of the educational community, should provide the framework within which improved access to higher education for students can become a reality rather than a hope.

The growth of student financial aid programs

The 10-year period from 1958 to 1968 has been a time of explosive and exciting growth for student financial aid programs. In 1958, before the strong commitments made by the educational community and the state and federal governments to equality of educational opportunity, there was approximately $200 million in undergraduate financial assistance available nationwide. It has been estimated that the totals for the academic year 1968-69 will be $1.5 billion. The trend is toward awarding aid to all students with need who have the ability to do college-level work, as opposed to awarding it only to students who can do work of scholarship caliber. With a continuing strong dollar commitment to education the time may now be approaching when every student capable of obtaining a college education will have access to sufficient funds to meet his needs.

The distribution of funds

A 1964 study by the College Scholarship Service (css) in conjunction with the United States Office of Education, the American Council on Education, and the American Association of Junior Colleges1 indicated that during the academic year 1963-64 freshman students received approximately 27 percent of the total undergraduate financial assistance dollar. The increased emphasis on seeking out capable but needy students coupled with the emergence of new programs that start at the freshman level has certainly increased the percentage and dollar amount of assistance committed to freshmen. Professional aid administrators estimate that 35 percent of the total undergraduate assistance dollar goes to freshmen. If this estimate is applied to the projected 1968-69 total, freshmen should have received approximately $525 million, or more than two and a half times the total financial assistance available to all undergraduates in 1958.

The packaging concept. Concomitant with the great increase in available funds has come a strong preference for the more equitable distribution of these funds. Basic to the trend toward more equitable distribution is the implementation of the concept of packaging aid. Student self-help in the form of employment or student-incurred loans is considered a major resource in the financing of a college education. Packaging therefore refers simply to the process whereby a student's need is met by providing him with access to loans and jobs, as well as gift assistance in the form of scholarships or grants. The percentage of gift aid and self-help will vary from institution to institution depending on the appraisal of the student's ability, the cost of attending the institution, the philosophy of the institution, and the amount of assistance available. The practice of packaging aid is, however, well established. Almost every institution in the country packages aid to a substantial degree.

Who pays for college?

If the increase in financial assistance in the past 10 years has been dramatic, the increase in educational costs has been equally so. By the time the 1970 high school graduate enrolls in college the average cost of attending a four-year college or university as a resident student will probably exceed $2,000 a year for a publicly supported institution, and $3,000 a year for a private institution.

As a result, the number of students who will find it necessary to seek assistance in meeting these spiraling costs will also grow. Fortunately, the expansion of programs should at least keep pace with the growing demands placed on them.

The most recent study on the types and amounts of assistance available is one conducted by the College Scholarship Service on behalf of the United States Office of Education. The study showed that for the 1967 fiscal year, which includes the 1967-68 academic year, the following aid was available for undergraduate students.

Federal grants and scholarships	$ 256.0
State scholarships	83.0

It is estimated that during the 1968-69 academic year the total amount of aid available to undergraduate students will have increased to about $1.5 billion.

Undergraduate aid is being distributed to an increasing number of students. Many institutions have indicated that more than 50 percent of their students receive some assistance from some source during their undergraduate years. As the cost of attending a college continues to rise, it is evident that even more students and families will seek help in financing a college education.

What the student can do for himself

Since the student is the one who gains the many benefits from higher education, he should assume at least part of the responsibility for paying his college expenses. He can do this by saving, by working, and by borrowing; he can also control expenses to a considerable extent by his choice of college.

No student should consider it impossible to attend college because his finances are limited. Many students who must help support their families are able to continue their education beyond high school. Jobs and loans are the most readily available kinds of financial aid, and virtually every college can either provide them itself or help students to locate them. In talking with students, counselors cannot stress too much the availability of these resources to all students.

What is expected of parents

A college student's most important source of financial help is his parents. Some families, of very modest means, can give only moral support, but most give substantial financial help as well. Recent studies indicate that most parents have only a vague idea of how much a college education costs today. And many do not know how much they should pay toward their son's or daughter's educational expenses. Some parents do not wish to provide as much as their financial circumstances indicate they should. Furthermore, even those who are willing to assist their children do not make adequate plans to provide the funds that are needed.

In early 1966, the College Scholarship Service sponsored a research study to evaluate the accuracy of middle-income families' estimates of what college actually costs, how much outside financial aid they believe is available to them, and, most important, what savings programs they have for meeting future college bills.²

The Marples' study included 849 families, from five geographically separated communities, whose mean gross income was $14,000 annually. Ninety-five percent of the parents planned to send their children to four-year colleges; 60 percent planned on state-supported colleges, and 74 percent planned to have their children board at the college. Although the majority of the families had relatively good information about college costs—their estimates of $2,226 for public and $3,117 for private colleges compare favorably with professional estimates of about $2,000 and $3,000 respectively—their estimates of the availability of financial aid were less adequate.

The majority believed that 30 percent of all students receive assistance from outside sources to cover about 42 percent of costs. Twenty-three percent expected scholarship aid.

These estimates are unrealistically high for families of the income levels included in this study. The average income of parents whose children are receiving aid today at most colleges is below $10,000. As college costs continue to rise, the number of expensive colleges where the average income of parents of financial aid recipients is in excess of $10,000 will also rise. However, such parents are inclined to overestimate the amount of financial aid they would be eligible for or would receive.

Even more disturbing than this overconfidence about the availability of financial aid was the lack of planning about ways of meeting the remaining expenses. While parents expected that 39 percent of the costs would be covered by their savings and investments, fully 62 percent of them said that they have no plan whatever for accumulating a specific sum of money to meet future college expenses. For those who did have a college savings plan, the average amount saved by parents in 1965 was slightly more than $300.

Colleges are eager to help parents meet educational expenses, but they expect each family to pay as much as it can reasonably afford and at least as much as other families in similar financial circumstances. They expect a family to draw on its current income and on its accumulated assets when such assets are more than sufficient to cover the retirement needs of the parents.

Parents who seek financial help from colleges or from private or public agencies are generally asked to supply detailed information, in confidence, about their financial situation. The school counselor can help parents understand that colleges require family financial data so that they can distribute their limited funds fairly to all qualified candidates. A counselor can also help families make realistic plans to pay for college by giving them up-to-date information on college expenses. This information would include reasonable estimates of a student's incidental and personal expenses—not just tuition, room and board, and required fees.

The College Scholarship Service publishes annually A Letter to Parents: Financial Aid for College, intended specifically to help parents understand what is expected of them in terms of student support. The booklet is sent to secondary schools for distribution to parents of seniors who believe they need financial aid and who will complete the Parents' Confidential Statement. Schools are encouraged to use A Letter to Parents in other appropriate ways. For example, it could be made available to teachers and counselors who are likely to be instrumental in students' decisions concerning college, and to parents of younger students through P.T.A. meetings, parents' nights, and so forth. In the early fall of each year, the css distributes copies of A Letter to Parents to secondary schools together with the Parents' Confidential Statement forms. An order form is also included so that schools may order additional supplies of A Letter to Parents. The css asks the assistance of counselors in making the most effective distribution of this booklet.

What assistance is available

As previously explained, colleges and universities increasingly combine the various forms of student assistance available, to meet more adequately the financial needs of their students. Each college must, however, balance its students' needs against the resources the institution has available A college may offer only part of its financial aid in the form of scholarships.

The rest may be offered in the form of loans and jobs. Some students may receive a scholarship, others a loan, and still others a job. Many students receive a financial aid package that combines various types of assistance in order to meet the student's needs. This trend is increasing as colleges help more needy students, continue to increase charges, and endeavor to coordinate the various parts of their financial aid programs and make them more effective.

Student employment

In recent years, student employment has become a better-organized and more important source of financial aid. In addition to working during the summer, students can usually find part-time employment either on the campus or in the college community. In fact, some institutions expect each student receiving financial help from the college to work during the academic year. As the 1963-64 survey indicates, many colleges are guaranteeing term-time jobs as part of an aid award. These jobs, for specified wages, are offered in the dining halls, libraries, and administrative offices of colleges.

A student who is not offered a guaranteed job by his college before beginning the freshman year should consult the job placement bureau; most campuses have one. This bureau provides detailed information about employment during the term, both on the college campus and in the community. The college will help the student determine how much term-time employment he should undertake.

Several institutions have their own particular programs of student self-help. There are cooperative plans that enable some or all of the students to work during a portion of the year in a field related to their courses of study. There are "room and board jobs" in which the student lives with a local family and receives free room or free board or both in return for doing household chores. And there are cooperative houses where students may live and prepare their own meals, thereby reducing college living expenses substantially.

Some counselors and prospective college students worry about the time demands of part-time employment. There are reasonable limits, however, which well-run programs take into account. Many colleges have found that up to 15 hours a week is a reasonable work load that will not impair a student's academic performance. A good college employment program offers jobs of various types and hours and thus puts at a maximum the chance that each student will get a job that and his academic schedule and skills.

Under the College Work-Study Program (see below), a maximum average of 15 hours' work per week is allowed during periods when school is in session. Students and counselors should be wary of programs that offer work loads of 20 hours a week or more.

Some simple arithmetic can illustrate the potential benefits of a well-run employment program. During an academic year of 35 weeks, a student who works 10 hours a week at $1.60 an hour can earn about $560 toward his annual college expenses; 15 working hours a week would pay him about $840.

A student who has a serious financial problem should consider college employment programs (both term time and summer) when choosing a college. If he finds a college that has an active employment program that can offer him a $400-$800 term-time job with reasonable hours and also help him secure a 12-week summer job at $600-$1,000, much of his financial problem will be solved. In addition, his chances of avoiding excessive borrowing would be improved.

The College Work-Study Program, established under the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, provides many new and educationally related employment opportunities for students. Formerly limited to students from families with low incomes, it was expanded by the Higher Education Act of 1965 to make eligible any student who demonstrates financial need. A clear preference has been retained, however, for students from low-income families. Table 1 defines low-income families according to income and number of dependents. For each case, preference would be given to families whose incomes are below the amounts shown in the right-hand column.

Student loans

Borrowing for higher education has become so widespread that colleges are seriously concerned about the amount of indebtedness students are accumulating. Little agreement exists as to what is a reasonable amount of indebtedness, since much depends on a student's long-range vocational plans. However, colleges are becoming increasingly cautious about granting institutional loans that raise an undergraduate's total borrowing above $4,000. Depending on the outcome of other aid applications, therefore, a student may wish finally to choose his college on the basis of how much he might need to borrow and whether this is a reasonable amount.

Students should first apply to colleges or universities for loans; these institutions administer most of the low-interest loans that are available. A student who has financial need often may borrow money from a college's revolving loan funds at a simple interest rate of only 1 to 4 percent. He repays the college after completing his undergraduate or graduate studies.

Some colleges cancel part of a student's loan if he enters a certain profession—such as teaching, the ministry, or social work. Counselors may obtain details about college loan programs from the literature published by colleges and from college financial aid officers.

In addition to long-term, low-interest loans, many colleges also offer short-term loans to students in order to meet financial emergencies. A short-term loan usually carries a slightly higher rate of interest than a long-term one and must be repaid within a year.

The National Defense Student Loan Program, established in 1958, is one of the largest single sources of student loan funds. By the end of the 1967-68 academic year, the more than 1,700 colleges and universities that were participating in the program had lent more than $1 billion to about one million full- and part-time enrolled students.

A student begins paying back a loan under the National Defense Student Loan Program after he completes his education and at the end of any period of military service. He may take as long as 10 years to finish repaying. No interest is charged until the student is required to begin repaying his loan. At this time, a 3 percent charge is applied to the unpaid balance. (The student may begin paying off the loan ahead of schedule if he wishes.) The 3 percent interest charge continues on the decreasing balance until the loan is paid off. Students who go into teaching at any level, public or private, may receive a cancellation of part or all of their indebtedness.

State and other sources of loan aid provide guaranteed loan programs that make it easier and less expensive for students to borrow for higher education. These programs have grown and become even more important in recent years because of the interest of the federal government as expressed in Title IV, Part B, of the Higher Education Act of 1965. To encourage states to establish guaranteed loan programs, Title IV, Part B, provides federal funds to assist in guaranteeing the loans and to subsidize interest charges to the student.

Although state programs vary, all provide for long-term loans to be made directly to students. Loans under most of these programs are administered by commercial banks. Generally, the banks make available loans up to $1,000 (some as high as $1,500) per year, repayable following graduation. For students from families whose adjusted annual income is less than $15,000, the federal government will pay all interest that accrues before the student graduates or terminates studies. Normally the student will assume repayment of the loan at 7 percent simple interest.

Most of these guaranteed programs are administered by state agencies. Some are handled by United Student Aid Funds, Incorporated, a private nonprofit organization. A counselor should consult his state education department for specific information about his state's guaranteed loan program.

Commercial loan programs. An increasing number of banks, insurance companies, and finance corporations are lending funds for educational purposes to parents or, in a few instances, directly to students. These loans are usually made without regard to an applicant's financial need, and their terms and rates of interest are similar to most consumer loans for automobiles, major appliances, and furniture. Commercial loan programs, because they must make a profit, have a higher rate of interest than those operated by colleges, states, and educational and philanthropic organizations. They should therefore be recommended only to students who have little financial need. Needy students who have been unsuccessful in obtaining less expensive educational loans may find commercial loans necessary.

Since it is difficult to generalize about the many types of commercial loan programs, counselors should urge parents to read carefully the information these agencies distribute and to seek clear answers to the following questions.

- 1. Is the plan available nationally, or is its use restricted to some particular region or locality?
 - 2. What is the interest rate?
 - 3. What do extra features cost?
 - 4. How much may a family borrow annually?
 - 5. How much may a family borrow for each child?
- 6. What is the total amount a family may borrow for all its children?
- 7. What time periods are possible in repaying a loan? What time periods are possible in prepaying (creating savings)?
- 8. Is it possible for the company to terminate the plan before the student's contract ends? If so, under what conditions can the company do this and how much notice must it give before cancellation?
- 9. Is it possible for the borrower to terminate the plan before the contract ends? If so, what are the penalties and how much notice is required?
- 10. What happens to the debt or the money accumulated if the student dies?
- 11. Under what conditions, if any, does the note become payable in full and at once?
- 12. Is it possible to increase the frequency or the amount of loan repayments?
- 13. Is life insurance on the borrower provided? If so, is a medical examination ever necessary?
- 14. Does the life insurance, if provided, continue throughout the life of the plan? If so, does the amount remain constant or does it decrease?
- 15. Is disability insurance on the borrower provided?
- 16. Is there an age limit above which a parent cannot qualify for the program?
 - 17. Is there any investigation of parents' finances?

- 18. Are there restrictions on the wage earner's changing his job?
- 19. How long does it take to complete arrangements for the loan?

The school and the college can bring various loan programs to a student's attention, but the student must take advantage of the opportunities himself. Students should not be afraid to borrow for their education, nor should counselors be reluctant to encourage their students to do so.

Scholarships

Although this booklet has focused so far on forms of self-help such as jobs and loans, scholarships and grants are also important in student financial aid. In the survey referred to earlier on page 3, gift aid comprised 48 percent of institutional aid; loans, 34 percent; and jobs, 18 percent. Naturally, gift aid is the most sought after, since no work or future repayment obligation is entailed. However, along with other forms of financial aid, it is being awarded increasingly to help able students who could not otherwise attend college, rather than just to reward or attract particularly talented students.

Colleges are the first source to which students should apply for scholarships. Not only do they provide the largest number of scholarships themselves, but they are also the best source of information about scholarships awarded by noncollege sponsors. Colleges publish a considerable amount of information about their financial aid programs and the characteristics of students who receive aid, and counselors will find this information useful in helping individual students select colleges that might come close to meeting their financial needs.

The Edu. itional Opportunity Grants Program, established under the Higher Education Act of 1965, is providing substantial additional amounts of gift assistance. When the program is in full operation in 1969-70, four college classes will have enrolled since it began. Under present legislation as much as $280 million could be appropriated by Congress at that time.

Educational Opportunity Grants, in amounts of up to $1,000 per academic year, are available to students who are admissible to postsecondary institutions and who demonstrate "exceptional financial need." Students with "exceptional financial need" are defined as those who come from families in which the parents can provide less than $600 a year toward the expenses of a postsecondary education.

This is an "opportunity" program. Grants are available to any student with need who is progressing normally toward a degree. They are not by any means restricted to students who are expected to or actually do maintain a strong academic average. In fact, colleges are expected to renew such grants to students who remain in college regardless of their academic performance.

These grants are awarded directly by the colleges and universities participating in the program. Counselors should direct qualified candidates to apply to the financial aid office of the institution they plan to attend.

One of the requirements for institutional participation in the Educational Opportunity Grants Program is the agreement of the institution to provide each recipient of a grant with an equal amount of financial assistance from other sources. These other sources may include institutionally administered loans; institutional, state, corporate, or other privately financed scholarships or tuition remissions; or institutionally administered employment. This requirement has increased the number of packaged awards made to students.

State in 1913, have become even more significant in recent years. California, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Texas, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin have all established competitive scholarships for state residents without restrictions on fields of study, for use in both public and private colleges. Some also offer tuition equalization programs specifically designed to assist families who elect to send their children to private institutions. Additional information about the availability of state scholarship programs can be obtained from the department of public instruction in the capital city of each state.

Other scholarships are frequently made available by communities, states, foundations, corporations and business firms, unions, religious organizations, clubs, and civic and cultural groups. Some programs award scholarships of varying amounts; others give fixed amounts. The school, parents, colleges, and local civic groups can sometimes help a student learn about these sponsored scholarship programs. Counselors should, of course, encourage needy students to investigate those programs for which they may be eligible. At the very least, students and their parents should inquire about scholarship and other financial aid programs offered by the companies that employ any family member and the unions to which any family member may belong.

The College Scholarship Service

In 1954, the College Entrance Examination Board established the College Scholarship Service (css) in reponse to an expression of need by colleges and sponsors of scholarship programs for a more equitable system of financial assistance—distribution and administration.

The College Scholarship Service accepted that charge and has been continuously involved in the development of a program that would serve both students and institutions.

Through national and regional conferences sponsored by the css, colleges meet to discuss their common problems and their individual aid policies. They are kept informed of the findings made in css-sponsored research on student financial aid. And, through a variety of publications, college officers learn how to improve the administration of their own aid programs and obtain current information on institutional and governmental financial aid programs.

The College Scholarship Service fosters cooperation among colleges and between schools and colleges on financial aid matters. It helps individual colleges coordinate their financial aid efforts, and it attempts to inform the public about financial aid programs, current educational expenses, and college aid practices. At the same time, it encourages able students to go to college, without regard to their financial limitations. The css itself does not award any financial aid to students.

Principally, the css acts as a clearinghouse for the family financial information that all css colleges and some noncollege sponsors require of their financial aid applicants. These colleges believe that the size of the awards made to students should be determined by their financial need. Aid resources administered according to this principle will help the maximum number of students.

The Parents' Confidential Statement

Since parents, on the average, provide half or more of the financial support for their child's college expenses, the amount that each family can reasonably afford must be carefully determined. To help colleges make this determination, the College Scholarship Service publishes and distributes a Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS) form that all CSS colleges require their aid applicants to complete and submit. (See pages 22-39 for a list of colleges requiring a PCS and the dates for filing with the css.) On the Parents' Confidential Statement form the parents enter family information and financial data pertinent to their son's or daughter's application for aid. Included is an estimate of the amount of financial support they expect to provide toward his or her annual college expenses. By giving detailed and accurate information, parents help the colleges do a better job of determining the family's financial strength. Colleges can then make decisions that are fair to individual applicants and to all enrolled students.

Starting in the fall and winter of 1966-67 and continuing to the present day, the css has sponsored a series of committee meetings and discussions with guidance counselors, teachers, and college administrators, devoted to the constant study and revision of the PCS form in an attempt to simplify its format while retaining the items of information that made sensitivity to unusual family circumstances a possibility. The form to be used during 1969-70 incorporates many of the recommended changes in an attempt to combine simplicity of use with completeness of data.

The parents of a student who is applying for aid should complete and submit only one copy of the Parents' Confidential Statement. They retain the second copy for themselves and send the master copy to the css. (The appropriate mailing address appears on the PCS itself.) The Parents' Confidential Statement is reviewed for completeness and consistency of information; if errors or omissions are found, the css writes to the parents to request clarification or additional information. By reading the instructions carefully and completing the form accurately, parents will avoid subsequent work in answering queries and prevent delays in processing.

One of the items on the PCs form asks for the student's Social Security number. Although it is not essential that a student obtain one for the sole purpose of completing the PCs, college applicants and counselors should be aware of the fact that colleges increasingly use Social Security numbers for identification purposes. Therefore, counselors should encourage high school seniors who do not yet have a Social Security number to obtain one.

After processing the PCs, the College Scholarship Service prepares an estimate of the amount that the parents can reasonably afford for college expenses from both their income and their assets, an estimate of what the student can provide from his own assets, and an estimate of the student's financial need at each of the colleges to which he is applying for aid. The css sends these estimates and photographic copies of the PCs to all colleges listed on the PCs by the applicant's family. The estimates of need made by the css merely serve as guides to the college aid officers.

It should be emphasized that each college decides whether an applicant is to be assisted, the extent of his financial need, and the amount and type(s) of aid he will be offered.

If the family's finances change markedly after the Parents' Confidential Statement is submitted—but before the student has accepted admission to a college—the parents should notify the css, which will then inform all colleges that were sent copies of the PCs.

After a candidate formally accepts admission to a college, he should notify that college directly if the family circumstances change or if he receives outside assistance.

Counselors can assure parents that the confidential nature of the information they give will be fully respected by the css. Copies of the completed PCS are transmitted only to the official representatives of colleges or noncollege sponsors named by the parents to receive them. Secondary schools are not informed of the contents of the PCS.

PCs fees

Because of increased processing costs it has been necessary for the css to reestablish the fee for the first copy of the css at $3. The fee for each additional copy sent to a college or sponsor remains at $2.

How financial need is determined

Financial need is a relative measure of the difference between the cost of attending a particular college and the total amount a student and his parents can afford to pay. College expenses include tuition, fees, room and board (for a resident student), books, incidental expenses (such as clothing, recreation, and spending money), and transportation between home and college. The student's financial resources include his savings, summer earnings, awards from agencies outside the college, and the amount of support his parents can provide. His financial need is the difference between these totals; it is the amount of help he will require to attend a particular college.

Family income is analyzed

A family's current income is its primary source of funds for college expenses. The contributions from family income recommended by the css are under continual study. In October 1967, these levels of contribution were significantly reduced for many families. This reduction was the result of a careful study of data compiled by the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, information about family spending habits, and surveys of college costs.

Because of the continuing rise in the cost of living in the United States, a further reduction in expected contribution has been made, effective October 1968. These reductions take into account changes in the Bureau of Labor Statistics' cost-of-living index and will affect families in all income levels. The contribution expected in an uncomplicated case from a family with two children and an income before taxes of $7,000 is reduced by $100; for the same size family with a before tax income of $12,000, the reduction is $150.

Table 2 reflects these new levels of expected contribution. Using Table 2 it is possible to estimate how much a family would be expected to provide from its income, according to the size of the income and the number of dependent children in the family. These estimates apply only to families with no unusual, complicating financial circumstances. Such families have only one of the two parents working, no other children in college or private school, no unusual medical expenses, and no dependents outside the immediate family. Families with complications of this kind generally reduce the expectations from income below the amounts shown in Table 2 and Figure 1 (page 14).

Parents' contribution reflects surtax through June 30, 1969.

Expectations from parents' income are based on three sources of information. One is a number of studies, made at colleges, of the ability and willingness of several thousand families to pay for college expenses. Another is data accumulated by the College Scholarship Service in the course of processing about two million Parents' Confidential Statements over the past 14 years. And, finally, there are the various cost-of-living studies constantly being made by government agencies.

The cost-of-living studies indicate that it usually costs a family $800 to maintain a dependent child adequately during an academic year of nine months. To provide this amount a family must have an income large enough to live at what economists call a "moderate budget level." According to the United States Department of Agriculture, for example, the level for a one-child family is approximately $6,500; the level for a two-child family is approximately $7,800; and the level for a three-child family is approximately $0,200.

Many families, of course, have incomes below the moderate budget level and, as a result, are assumed to spend less than $800 to maintain a child for nine months. Therefore, the minimum amount colleges will expect from the incomes of these families will also be less than $800.

The levels indicating poverty, based on Department of Agriculture data as interpreted by the Social Security Administration, start with $3,500 for the one-child, two-parent family. At those incomes the css system will expect $100 per academic year from the family, and there is a gradual increase to the $800 expectation at the moderate budget level.

When family income exceeds the moderate budget level, the family is considered to have "discretionary income"—money that the family can use as it considers best for such expenditures as education. When a family has discretionary income it is expected, under css procedures, to provide more than $800 for college expenses. Thus, where Figure 1 or Table 2 indicates an expectation from family income of more than $800, the amount over $800 is expected to come from the family's discretionary income.

It is most important to remember that the expectations shown in Figure 1 and Table 2 are for families that do not have unusual problems—such as extra dependents, debts, emergency expenses, two working parents, or another child in college or private school. Families that have unusual problems would not be expected to provide as much.

Family support from assets

A family's financial strength, and hence its ability to pay for college, depends on its assets as well as its income. Assets may be viewed as reflecting an added measure of ability to pay in accordance with an income-flow concept. In effect, this concept says that assets usually have been achieved by deferring consumption in the past for consumption at a future time. Conversely, one can see a given asset strength as being capable of providing an annual flow of supplemental contributions to current income—contributions that can be used for various consumption purposes, such as education.

Under this system, all assets—such as savings, investments, and real estate equity—are assigned equal value, totaled and reduced by the amount of indebtedness the family has, thereby producing the family's net worth.

The net worth is then reduced by an amount appropriate to the age of the parent or guardian concerned, in order to provide him with an adequate annual retirement supplement to Social Security. Adequate retirement is established at $3,700 annually for a couple, and $2,400 for one person. These levels are based on retirement statistics of the United States Social Security Administration.

The allowance against net worth, then, is based on age, to permit the purchase of an annuity for the amount necessary. These retirement allowances against net worth range from $7,000 for the 45-year-old father who has Social Security, to $9,850 when he is 55, to $15,500 when he is 65.

After deduction of the retirement allowance, the remainder of family net worth is considered to be "discretionary net worth." In other words, it represents an asset value or dollar amount of resources over and above that required to cover retirement needs. Therefore, it can be considered avaitable to supplement annual income for the purchase of goods and services, including higher education.

The "discretionary net worth" is converted to annual income by a table of conversion ratios. This system protects the income potential of the discretionary net worth throughout the parent's life expectancy, and it takes into account normal assets growth during the years up to age 60. The resulting figure is then considered to be the annual income flow from discretionary net worth and is added to the family's income to produce "adjusted income." From the adjusted income, then, one amount is expected from the family, rather than separate contributions from income and assets.

A detailed description of css procedures for estimating family support for educational expenses appears in the Manual for Financial Aid Officers, a publication of the College Entrance Examination Board. The Manual is prepared primarily for financial aid officers, but counselors who help administer local scholarship programs may also find it very helpful. The Manual is intended for professional use; it may be ordered from the css only on official school stationery.

Four typical examples

The following cases illustrate the way in which need and financial aid awards are determined by colleges for their students.

Suppose that two students, John and David, apply for financial assistance from College X. Both students plan to live at the college, where expenses are $2,650 a year for tuition, room, board, incidental expenses, and transportation.

John's family has an annual income of $7,000. His mother is a housewife; there are three other children, all younger than John. His father, age 55, is steadily employed. The family has a $9,000 equity in a house valued at $13,000, $1,000 in savings, and debts of $400. In view of the father's age, the assets are too modest to be considered, since the retirement allowance is $9,850. John's family, therefore, will be expected to draw only on its income to help cover his college expenses. According to Figure 1 and Table 2, the normal amount expected from a four-child family whose parental income is $7,000 is about $280 per year. John plans to earn and save $400 during the summer before his freshman year. In addition, he has $500 in savings from gifts and part-time employment, accumulated while attending high school. From these accumulated savings College X will expect him to apply $100 a year to his college bill. John and his family together, the college believes, will be able to pay $780 toward the expenses of his freshman year— $280 from family income, $400 from John's summer earnings, and $100 from his savings. His financial need, therefore, is $2,650 (college expenses) minus $780 (family resources), or $1,870.

College X offers to meet John's need with an Educational Opportunity Grant of $500, an institutional grant-in-aid of $670, a $300 job, and a $400 loan. (Many other combinations were possible, such as a $1,470 scholarship and a $400 loan, or a $970 scholarship, a $300 job, and a $600 loan.)

David's father, on the other hand, earns $15,000, has an equity of $18,000 in a $30,000 house, and other savings and investments totaling $10,000. He is 55 years of age. David has a younger brother who attends a special school that costs the family $1,500 annually, and a younger sister in public school. A grandmother lives with the family and is totally dependent.

Because of these complications, Figure 1 does not apply. Using the computation procedure for complicated cases, however, College X determines that David's parents can reasonably afford $1,570 from income and assets combined. With David's normal summer earnings of $400, the family would be able to contribute about $1,970. Since the total cost of College X is $2,650, David's financial need is only $680. David would probably be offered a loan or job or some combination worth that amount. David's family could, if it chose, borrow from a guaranteed loan program, rather than accept the college's offer or in order to reduce the amount they would be expected to contribute. Or they could take advantage of the college's installment payment plan.

In David's case, the expectation from parents' income alone would have been about $1,270, the additional $300 of the $1,570 coming from the income flow produced by the family's assets. Even if the assets had not been sufficient to produce an income flow, the total family resources would have totaled about $1,670—$1,270 from the parents and $400 from David's summer earnings.

Paul applies to College Y, where expenses total $2,000 a year. His mother and father both work, and their combined income is $9,000 a year. Paul has two younger sisters, one of whom was hospitalized during the past year at a cost to the family of $600. They live in an apartment and have a $3,000 bank account. Paul has $1,000 of his own saved, and the college assumes he will work and save another $400 during the summer before college. The family's assets are too small to be considered. Taking into account the recent hospital bill and the fact that both parents work, College Y expects the parents to apply about $510 from their income toward Paul's college bill. From his summer earnings and savings the college expects Paul to provide $400 and $200, respectively, for a total of $600. His financial need is, therefore, $2,000 (expenses) minus $1,110 (resources), or $890. College Y offers Paul a $390 scholarship, a $150 loan, and a $350 job under the Work-Study Program. The scholarship, loan, and job together cover his need.

Mary lives with her parents in the same town as College A and can commute to it. But she would rather attend College B, in another state, as a resident student. Mary has two younger brothers and a younger sister. The family has an income of $9,000, owns a $14,000 home on which there is a $7,000 mortgage, and has savings of $2,000. Mary has another $1,000 that she has saved. Since there are no family complications, the family contribution from income can be determined from Table 2 or Figure 1. (Because Mary's father is 55 and family assets are so modest, no support from assets is expected.)

Mary decides to apply to both College A and College B for admission and financial aid.

As Table 2 indicates, the family will be expected to contribute $600 from income. It will not be expected to contribute anything from assets. Mary herself will be expected to provide another $500-$300 from money earned during the summer before college and $200 from her savings. Mary's and her parents' total resources, therefore, amount to $1,100.

Subtracting these resources from $2,400—the cost of one year's residence at College B—leaves Mary with a need of $1,300. College B approves Mary's application for admission but, because its resources are limited and because her family's income is too high to qualify her for an Educational Opportunity Grant, offers her only a $450 scholarship, a $200 loan, and a $200 term-time job. These total $850, leaving Mary still needing $450.

College A also costs a resident student $2,400 a year. But a commuter could attend for $1,950 a year, or $450 less. This is a typical difference between the estimated cost of supporting the student at home and the cost of room and board at college.

Since Mary applied as a commuter, College A offers her a $500 scholarship, a $200 loan, and a $150 term-time job. This financial aid of $850 added to the family's total resources for college of $1,100 equals the $1,950 she would need.

Mary must now decide whether to attend College B, and somehow make up the $450 she would still need, or to attend College A, where her need would be fully met. She might try to earn more money during the summer in order to attend College B, or she might begin drawing on her savings more heavily than the college expects. This second solution, of course, would leave her short of funds in the upper-class years. The family could also borrow from commercial sources.

What sample cases show

From these examples, it is apparent that there are some colleges, like X, that fully meet the financial needs of most students who receive aid. But there are also many colleges, like B, that can meet only part of this need because their financial aid funds are limited. Increasingly, these differences can be met through commercial or state guaranteed loan funds, if the family and student desire.

It is also apparent from the examples that colleges evaluate each student application for aid carefully and consider every circumstance that affects a family's financial situation. Most colleges also review the student's financial circumstances before each of his upper-class years.

In general, colleges that use the services of the College Scholarship Service arrive at similar estimates of the amount of money a family should provide for college expenses. They use the same information, reported in the Parents' Confidential Statement, and evaluate it according to common principles. The combinations of aid offered-scholarship, loan, and job-may vary. And the amount of each type of aid may vary. But the total value of an award is based on the difference between what a student and his parents can provide and what a college costs. Thus, a student will seldom gain an advantage by selecting a college on the basis of its financial aid offer. Rather, he should make his choice on the more valid basis of how well the college is likely to help him reach his goals.

A summary of suggestions

The information given in this booklet describing how students can finance their college expenses, how the College Scholarship Service functions, and how financial need is determined, includes a number of suggestions that are intended to be helpful to a counselor. The following list summarizes the most important things counselors can do to help.

- 1. Encourage all students capable of continuing their education beyond high school to do so, whatever their financial circumstances. Students who are highly motivated toward higher education will only need information on college admissions and opportunities for financial aid. Those who are reluctant to continue their education will need special encouragement and detailed information about opportunities for aid from colleges and from noncollege sponsors of financial aid.
- 2. Use the new federal programs to help students of marginal motivation gain more confidence in planning for the future.
- 3. Help students understand that they are the ones who benefit from higher education and that they should not be reluctant to apply for or accept an educational loan. Working and borrowing for college are sound ways for students to help themselves.
- 4. Help parents and students understand that financial aid is principally awarded by colleges to help students who need it, rather than to reward students for outstanding achievement.
- 5. Help parents understand that colleges expect them to draw primarily upon their income, and to some extent upon assets, for their child's education. Colleges adjust the amount of aid they award according to the financial need of a student.
- 6. Urge students in need of financial assistance to contribute to their own education by saving for college expenses during high school and by working during the summer before entering college and, perhaps, during the college year as well.
- 7. Urge students to write to noncollege sponsors of aid and to colleges of their choice for information on aid opportunities and how to apply for help.

- 8. Give one copy of the current edition of the Parents' Confidential Statement form to each student in need of financial assistance who is applying for aid at colleges that require or request the PCS, and a copy of the booklet A Letter to Parents: Financial Aid for College.
- 9. Make certain that students and their parents understand that the Parents' Confidential Statement is not considered by most colleges to be an application for financial aid. In most cases an application for financial aid to each college of the student's choice must also be submitted. An application for admission must, of course, also be filed.
- 10. Encourage those high school seniors who do not yet have a Social Security number to obtain one.
- 11. Provide students with information about the financial aid programs of colleges and noncollege sponsors.
- 12. Acquaint parents and students with the financial aid principles that have been agreed upon by the colleges that belong to the College Scholarship Service Assembly.

College financial aid principles

The following "Statement of Principles Guiding the Administration of Financial Aid Programs" of the more than 1,050 members of the College Scholarship Service Assembly is presented for one purpose—to help school counselors, parents, and students better understand the goals of college financial aid programs.

As a statement of principles, not of practices, it cannot describe in detail the interaction that takes place on financial aid matters between a particular student and a particular college or between colleges. College policies are guided by these principles; college practices, however, differ necessarily since tradition and local conditions have long determined them in our free educational community. These fundamental principles, on which all css colleges agree, are as follows:

- 1. The primary purpose of a college's financial aid program should be to provide financial assistance to students who, without such aid, would be unable to attend the college.
- 2. Financial assistance consists of scholarships, loans, and employment, which may be offered to students singly or in various combinations.
- 3. The family of a student is expected to make a maximum effort to assist the student with college expenses. Financial assistance from colleges and other sources should be viewed only as supplementary to the efforts of the family.
- 4. In selecting students with need to receive financial assistance, the college should place primary emphasis upon their academic achievement, character, and future promise.
- 5. The total amount of financial assistance offered a student by a college and by other sources should not exceed the amount he needs.
- 6. In determining the extent of a student's financial need, the college should take into account the financial support which may be expected from the income, assets, and other resources of the parents and the student.
- 7. In estimating the amount that a student's family can provide for college expenses, the college should consider the factors that affect a family's financial strength: current income, assets, number of dependents, other educational expenses, debts, retirement needs. In addition, it should consider such special problems as those confronting widows and families in which both parents work.

- 8. A student who needs financial aid should provide a reasonable part of the total amount required to meet college costs by accepting employment, or a loan, or both. Acceptance of a loan, however, should not be considered by the college as a prerequisite to the award of a scholarship or job.
- 9. Because the amount of financial assistance awarded usually reflects the financial situation of the student's family, a public announcement of the amount by the college is undesirable.
- 10. Consultation between colleges on the kind and amount of financial assistance to be offered a mutual candidate should be encouraged, since this assures relatively equal aid offers to the student, making it possible for him to choose a college on educational rather than financial grounds. This benefits both the student and the college.
- 11. The college should clearly state the total yearly cost of attendance and should outline for each student seeking assistance an estimate of his financial need.
- 12. The college should review its financial assistance awards annually and adjust them, if necessary, in type and amount to reflect changes in the financial needs of students and the cost of attending the institution, as well as to carry out the college's clearly stated policies on upper-class renewals.
- 13. The college itself should make every effort, and should cooperate with schools and other colleges, to encourage college attendance by all able students.
- 14. The college should strive, through its publications and other communications, to provide schools, parents, and students with factual information about its aid opportunities, programs, and practices.

In attempting to observe and implement these principles, the colleges seek the cooperation of the secondary schools. They ask that the schools:

- 1. Refrain, in public announcements, from giving the amounts of financial aid received by students.
- 2. Encourage the student who has been awarded aid by noncollege sources to notify the colleges to which he applies for aid of the type and amount of such outside assistance.

- 3. In administering the school's own aid program and in assisting local groups to administer their awards, seek early advice from the college a student plans to attend on the amount of aid he will need.
- 4. Provide adequate opportunity within the school for all able students to receive special recognition of their accomplishments, thus making it unnecessary for colleges to provide such honorary recognition through their financial assistance programs.

Schools and colleges may reprint these College Financial Aid Principles and distribute them to interested persons. Or copies of this statement of principles may be ordered from the College Entrance Examination Board, Publications Order Office, Box 592, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

Colleges and agencies using the Parents' Confidential Statement

The list of colleges and agencies that follows has been prepared to assist secondary school counselors in identifying for their students the institutions that request or require the Parents' Confidential Statement (PCS) and by what date. The PCS should always be filed with the College Scholarship Service by the dates indicated rather than with an individual college or agency. Filing the PCS with the College Scholarship Service by these dates allows three to four weeks for processing by the CSS and forwarding to the colleges.

Colleges and agencies that are members of the College Scholarship Service as of October 1968 are indicated by an asterisk. They require most students applying for financial aid for college expenses for the 1970-71 academic year to submit the Parents' Confidential Statement. Other colleges, some of which will become members of the College Scholarship Service Assembly in October 1969, are listed at their own request and may require the PCs of some or all of their candidates.

A student or his parents should be sure to list the name of the college or agency in Item 3 of the PCS exactly as it appears in this booklet. It is also essential that the location (city and state) of each college listed in Item 3 be indicated for purposes of identification.

A student who is listing more than one college or agency to receive a copy of the PCs should file the form by the earliest of the dates specified by those colleges and agencies. Copies of forms filed after the desired receipt dates will be processed and forwarded to the colleges and agencies, but under these circumstances a student cannot be certain of being considered for financial assistance.

The scholarship agencies appearing at the end of the list are provided for the convenience of applicants to these scholarship programs. Certain state scholarship or sponsored scholarship programs and agencies that are not listed may also require the PCS of some or all of their candidates. Candidates should not, however, request that copies of the PCS be forwarded until they have been asked to do so by the scholarship program or agency. If required to submit the PCS, a candidate should enter the official name of the state or other scholarship program concerned in Item 3 of the PCS.
